APA 2021 Convention Issue

Greetings, SAW friends! Thank you for your continued interest in SAW. I am bringing you a short Summer 2021 issue highlighting APA 2021 programs of interest as well as accomplishments submitted by our members. I'll look forward to bringing you a full issue of WomanView this fall.

Be safe and well!

-Morgan M. Grotewiel, Ph.D., Editor, WomanView

APA 2021 Events

SAW is not hosting any events at APA 2021, but there are several opportunities for you to support SAW members!

SAW Chair-Elect Nicole "Nic" Johnson, Ph.D. will be receiving the Division 35 Section 4 Early Career Psychologist Pedagogy Award at The Division 35 Awards Ceremony on Saturday, August 14, 3:00pm - 4:30pm (PDT) via the following link <https://z.umn.edu/DIV35>. APA Registration is not required to attend. Congratulations, Dr. Johnson!

I received two additional submissions of relevant programming from SAW members; these programs will be of interest to many of you:

Brady-Amoon, P., & Hammond, M. S. (2021, August 12-15). Leveraging psychology faculty's scientific foundation: Using data to promote social justice. In K. Keefe-Cooperman (Chair), Teaching diversity: Using data to promote social justice [Symposium]. American Psychological Association 129th Annual Convention, virtual.

Lipp, N. S., Credit, M., Johnson, N. L., Rizvi, Z., Mumtaz, F., Saiyed, F., & Tschauner, M. (2021, August 12-15). Unsafe at Home: Investigation Into the Effect of COVID-19 on Domestic Violence Agencies in the U.S. [Poster Presentation]. American Psychological Association 129th Annual Convention, virtual.

Note: These are on-demand presentations available for three months. Access more information about APA 2021 here: <https://convention.apa.org>

Announcements and Accomplishments

Marie S. Hammond, Ph.D. and Peggy Brady-Amoon, Ph.D. co-authored Building Your Career in Psychology, scheduled for publication this Fall. More information including pre-order information is available at <https://www.routledge.com/Building-Your-Career-in-Psychology/Hammond-Brady-Amoon/p/book/9780367274993#>

Nicole “Nic” Johnson, Ph.D., is co-editing a special issue for Women & Therapy called Resistance & Recovery in the #MeToo Era, which is in the final stages of publication. Learn more about the journal here: <https://www.tandfonline.com/toc/wwat20/current>

Earlier this year, Jill D. Paquin, Ph.D. and M. Nicole (Nikki) Coleman, Ph.D. co-edited a special issue on Women and Group Therapy for the International Journal of Group Psychotherapy. Anyone who teaches a course in Group, practices group therapy, or conducts group research may be interested in the articles from this issue. Silvia Sara Canetto, Ph.D. and colleagues recently published a 20-country study that provides evidence of a suicide-protective role for men who engage in family carework. This study found that in countries where men reported more carework, men's suicide rates were not higher when unemployment rates were higher. By contrast, in countries where men reported less family carework, higher unemployment rates were associated with elevated male suicide rates. Unemployment programs did not reduce male suicide rates. The study's findings suggest incorporating support for men's engagement in family carework in programs aimed at reducing men's suicide mortality. “This means expanding beyond dominant frameworks of men's suicide prevention, and their employment-support focus,” Dr. Canetto explained in an interview. This study's findings, together with those of many other studies, suggest that “having both family care work and family economic responsibilities is more conducive to well-being, health and longevity for men and women than a gendered division of family labor,” said Dr. Canetto.
